The Center for Applied Social and Economic Research (CASER) at NYU Shanghai, established on November 19, 2020, is dedicated to fostering methodologically rigorous, multi-disciplinary research on the most pressing issues related to China's socioeconomic development. CASER now seeks a Postdoctoral Fellow to work on research projects in China related to longitudinal data collection and analysis.

Salary is internationally competitive and commensurate with experience. The position can start Sept 1, 2021 but not later than Decemeber, for an initial appointment of two years, renewable, subject to mutual agreement. The candidate will also have access to the Center's urban household panel survey data, such as "Hong Kong Panel Study of Social Dynamics [HKPSSD] and Shanghai Urban Neighborhood Survey [SUNS]), to pursue their own professional development in research on relevant themes.

Candidates should have an excellent academic background (Ph.D. degree) in quantitative social science or closely related fields, including demonstrated expertise in survey and experiment research design, advanced techniques of statistical data analysis for longitudinal, multilevel, and cross-nationally comparative data.
